US Supreme Court's Non-Decision Bodes Ill for Gun Industry

In major and encouraging news, the US Supreme Court on 11/12/19 declined to take up Remington Arms' appeal of a ruling by the Connecticut state Supreme Court allowing families of victims of the December 2013 Sandy Hook massacre to sue the gun maker of the AR-15 assault rifle used to murder grade school students, teachers and administrators.

This result has been described as 'the first chink' in the legal armor protecting the gun industry from consumer product liability faced by other industries and will enable discovery by the Sandy Hook families. Plaintiff's discovery has proven critical to changing behaviors of other industries.
